Contributors:

Jennifer L. Lieberman is an assistant professor of English at the University of North Florida, where she focuses on American literature and science and technology studies. An interdisciplinary teacher-scholar, has earned fellowships or scholarships from the Bakken Library and Museum, the Eaton Collection, the Smithsonian Institution, the Illinois Program for Research in the Humanities, and the National Science Foundation. The research she conducted in these intellectual communities suffuses her research, teaching, and other scholarly endeavors. Her book project, Power Lines: Electricity in American Life and Letters, 1882-1952, is forthcoming from MIT Press in July 2017. Her recent work can be found in History and Technology (2016), MELUS: Multi-Ethnic Literature in the US (2015), and in the collection of original work, Demands of the Dead: Executions, Storytelling, and Activism (University of Iowa, 2012).

David Ian Paddy teaches courses in Modern and Contemporary British Literature, Science Fiction and Celtic Literature at Whittier College, a small liberal arts college near Los Angeles. He is the author of The Empires of J. G. Ballard: An Imagined Geography (Canterbury: Gylphi 2015), and has also written articles on Angela Carter, Niall Griffiths, Jackie Kay and Jeff Noon. His current research is on small nation nationalism in the British Isles, looking to the links between literature and national identity in Wales, Scotland, the Isle of Man and Cornwall.

Sean Matharoo is a Ph.D. student in the Department of Comparative Literature and Foreign Languages at UC Riverside, where he studies francophone and anglophone speculative media, postcolonial theory, ecological philosophy, memory studies and trauma theory, Deleuze, Derrida, speculative realism, new materialism, film theory, sound studies, and media archaeology. He has a forthcoming article in a special issue of Horror Studies devoted to sonic horror and encyclopedia entries in the forthcoming Horror Literature through History: An Encyclopedia of the Stories that Speak to Our Deepest Fears. He has published book reviews in Science Fiction Studies and the Journal of the Fantastic in the Arts, and an interview with Erik Davis in The Los Angeles Review of Books. He is also working on a remix project involving audiovisual diagrams, dead media technologies, chimeras, drone, and noise.

Irene Morrison is a PhD Candidate in English at UC Riverside, with a designated emphasis in Speculative Fiction and Cultures of Science. Her research focuses on postcolonial and utopian science fiction. Irene is most recently the author of a review of Ahmed Khaled Towfik's Utopia (2016), in Paradoxa, and “Making Gender Trouble in Early Queer SF: Sam Delany’s ‘Aye, and Gomorrah’” (2015), in Foundation: The International Review of Science Fiction. 